

Greene

28th December, 1955.

Mr. Rupert Furneaux,
"Anquetil", Willowhayne Avenue,
East Preston,
Littlehampton,
Sussex, England.

Dear Mr. Furneaux,

Yours of the 13th instant, received with thanks.

Last fall, a syndicate of oil men from Texas started drilling with modern methods, and will return next May.
To the surprise of everyone, they went through an oak platform at 100 feet, and a second one at 110 feet. My theory has been that excavators since 1897, have lost the money pit, that is, they have operated in the wrong place. These bore holes were in an adjacent area, and we are waiting eagerly for some further exploration, as oak bores have not been found since 1897.

George Greene

I have virtually finished my book, but am waiting for some further explorations. I have several prospective publishers, but will keep your kind offer in mind. My story covers all explorations since 1795.

With every good wish for the New Year, I am,

Yours very sincerely,

Reginald V. Harris.

RVH:jg